Southeast Asia Reading Room Reservation Request

The Southeast Asia Reading is next to the office of the Librarian for South and Southeast Asian Studies. The reading room contains a Southeast Asian Studies reference collection and a small collection of current periodicals therefore books in the room do not circulate. The circulating collection can be found in the library stacks. The reading room is open during library hours and is available to everyone in the Yale community for study. The reading room also serves as a meeting space within the library for teaching and collaboration. The space is used primarily to support scheduled classes, programs, and events related to Southeast Asian Studies and these activities take precedence over other requests. Additionally, this space supports the work of the Yale University Library, serving as meeting space for committees and working groups. When not in use for these activities, the rooms will be available on a first-come, first-served basis to students. Students will need to vacate the rooms during planned events. A schedule will be posted at the entrance to the room indicating when the space is reserved.
