Yale Library introduces the new Course Reserves Management System

The Yale University Library has implemented a new course reserves management system that will bring significant improvements to the course reserves service.

Using the new system, students will be able to access all of their reserves materials – both print and electronic – in the same place. It will enable faculty to follow the status of reserves requests, copy materials from previous classes, and track the number of times an e-reserves reading has been accessed. It will also allow course reserves lists to be added from within Classes*v2, a platform which provides the Yale community with a powerful, integrated set of Web-based tools for teaching, learning, and sharing information.

Detailed information about the new course reserves system can be found at: http://guides.library.yale.edu/reserves [1]. Questions or concerns may be directed to library staff at reserves@yale.edu [2].

External link: http://www.library.yale.edu/librarynews/2013/08/yale_library_introduces_the_ne.h... [3]