

Library exhibits explore and reveal the history of women at Yale

January 27, 2020

Yale University Library has hosted or will host thirteen exhibits for the 50 Women at Yale 150 [1] celebration. Eleven of the library exhibits explore aspects of women's history at Yale, while the Senior Essay Exhibits for 2019 and 2020 showcase two contemporary students' research into the lives and work of women writers.

Library collections together with research by librarians and archivists are central in the commemoration of two historic milestones: the matriculation of the first women students in Yale College in 1969 and the opening of the Yale School of Art in 1869, with the university's first women students.

The 50 Women at Yale initiative aims "to showcase the depth of women's contributions to Yale and to the world, to celebrate women at the university, and to inspire thoughtful conversation about the future of women at Yale and in the larger society."

University Archivist Michael Lotstein has developed an extensive research guide to the history of co-education at Yale [2].

All library exhibits are free and open to the public. See library hours [3].
